

Kaitlin Collins

Winchester High School

I photographed this bright photo on a cold day in Park City, Utah. The small orange luminous lights help flatter the uniqueness outside of this cafe. viewer is left with an insight of what a local cafe in downtown Park City is like.

This large Rolex clock was placed Downtown on Main Street in 1884. Its large face prominently displays large Roman numerals and stands tall in the center of town. This photo lets you get a glimpse of the past and the history in Utah.

I took this photo to help better understand the mammoth size of the Wasatch mountains which are part of the Rocky Mountains Range in Park City, Utah. The light hitting the mountains brings out the beauty in nature and all the beautiful colors surrounded by us. This will forever be my favorite place to ski.

This gnarly snowboarder is crusin' down the slopes in Park City, Utah on a sunny but cold day. The background of this photo made me realize how massive mountains are and how beautiful they look from the top. All the different shades of blue reveal the calmness of riding down the ski trails.

This birds eye view from the top of the chairlift makes you feel like you are soaking up the sun even though it is a chilly day in Utah. The shadows give the photo characteristic and the sun looks heavenly hitting the snow. The dark brown trees make the ski trails look calm and mysterious.

This photo was taken at one of the peaks of the mountain on a cold windy day. The different heights of the mountains in the distance help give the photo different levels. This body of work points to a more general idea; the beauty of mountains and all the activities that mountains can allow us to do.

Looking at this photo makes me feel enchanted as I am surrounded by nature and its natural beauty. When observing the combination of trees and mountains, it makes me feel happy and at peace. The landscape in photo makes me feel like I am part of the scene and connected with nature.

The lightly covered pine trees help compliment the bright colored ski. This long ski lift brings you through the trees to the top of the mountain. The silence as you glide through the trees gives you the opportunity to soak in all the nature that is around you.

As I was driving along a highway on the side of a mountain, I noticed a large clump of sneakers tied around a section of trees. This mysterious and colorless photo allows me to make my own conclusion of what is going on.

This zoomed in photo of sneakers in a tree off of a highway in Park City, Utah. It makes me wonder who the “Ella” may be and why her name is written on a sneaker. The dark color of the shoes help compliment the gray cloudy sky. The angle of the photo is important to show the bottom of the shoes and all the different shoes on the tree.