

Return to Riverrun

Acknowledgements

Thomas L. Adams, former owner of an art gallery in Portland, Maine, and the founder of the Adams Center for Photographic Research and Study at the Institute of Art and Design at New England College, Manchester, NH.

Szari Lewis Bourque, whose portraits of her with her husband, Jean Bourque, appear in A Long the Riverrun.

John Brook, A Long the Riverrun, The Scrimshaw Press, 1970.

Dr. Robert Dickens, who owns an extensive collection of John Brook's photographs.

Jim Fitts, former Executive Director of the Photographic Resource Center, Inc. (PRC) and founder of the fine art photography blog photoweenie.com.

David Herwaldt, graphic designer, photographer, and educator, who provided a transcript of his extensive 1973 interview with John Brook.

Lou Jones, photographer, who became a photographer after being inspired by John Brook's photographs in A Long the Riverrun.

Pat Nelson, editor, photographer, and friend of John Brook.

Robert W. Rogers, collector and patron of John Brook.

Jessica Roscio, Interim Director and Curator of the Danforth Art Museum at Framingham State University.

Gary Samson, Professor Emeritus of Photography, New Hampshire Institute of Art, and New Hampshire Artist Laureate, 2017-2020.

Paula Tognarelli, Executive Director and Curator of the Griffin Museum of Photography.

Steven Trefonides, painter and photographer, whom John Brook encouraged to become a photographer.

Hope Zanes, photographer, collector, and friend of Robert Rogers, who introduced her to the photographs of John Brook.

Among the others who have contributed to the understanding of John Brook's impact on the mid-twentieth-century Boston art community are Fran Canisius, William Clift, Jean Gibran, Alison Lahnston, Helen McLeod, Dennis Poitras, and Phyllis Trefonides.