

Joy Bush is a fine art photographer based in Hamden, CT. She grew up near New York City and as a child, loved family excursions to NYC museums, theater productions, dance performances, and music concerts. The trips always ended with a delightful ice cream cone (or a delicious meal at the Stage Delicatessen). Joy discovered photography as an art form soon after graduating from college and eventually she landed a job as the university photographer for Southern Connecticut State University. Now retired from photographing for the university, she finds that she is drawn to photographing the echoes of the presence of people rather than people themselves.
